

This term can mean anything from an AFO (Assistive Foot Orthosis) to a Bioness L300Go to assist with maintaining foot and ankle control for walking to ensure foot drop doesn't cause one to trip and fall.

Additionally, a cane or walker can also be considered an assistive or recovery device.

As it pertains to the affected hand/arm, the term could mean anything from a simple neoprene hand orthotic (www.benik.com) to a Bioness H200 (www.bioness.com).

Basically, anything that assists a stroke survivor with recovering the use of the affected portions of the body could be called a recovery device.

Go to my page, Everyday Products, to find a list of everyday devices to help you out.