

Dysphagia is the medical term for difficulty swallowing or paralysis of the throat muscles.

This condition can make eating, drinking, taking medicine, and breathing difficult.

Many stroke survivors experience dysphagia or trouble swallowing at some point after a stroke. Difficulty swallowing is most common immediately after a stroke, but usually declines over time.